

RUSSIAN NOW WITHIN 85 MILES OF BERLIN

The War Today...

WE WON'T, if we are wise, shrug away the German defiance that they "will fight before Berlin." In Berlin, around Berlin and behind Berlin, even though at the same time Dr. Robert Ley, labor leader, admits that "in all probability what is left of the German capital may soon pass into Russian hands."

Nazism is cracking, and cracking fast but there are the markings of a bitter last-ditch stand—perhaps with Munich as the center of resistance. It's true Red forces are less than 100 miles from Berlin, and the Western Allies are rapidly getting set for major operations, but the general military situation well affords the Hitlerites opportunities for strong defense.

One important factor is that the Russians must nullify the German striking-power on their northern and southern flanks as they thrust that long salient through prepared enemy defenses towards Berlin. This may give the Nazis a reprieve.

If we could lift the roof off Hitler's headquarters and listen to one of the current raucous conferences, we probably should find that it had to go largely with the question of unconditional German surrender. That's bound to be, because surrender is the only reasonable course at this stage, despite the undoubted determination of the Nazi leaders to try to make the army stand and fight and to keep the civilian population in line.

If we could get that headquarters roof off, we should find several questions relating to surrender under discussion. And the foremost of these would relate to the fact that the Nazi chiefs are going to be punished for war guilt—maybe hanged by the neck until dead.

Self-preservation being the first law of nature, it's a safe bet this threat of personal punishment is the main stumbling block to surrender. Hitler and his captains have sacrificed millions of lives to satisfy Nazi dreams of conquest and they'll scarcely hesitate now to sacrifice the German people if it will save the hides of the leaders.

The Hitlerites hope delay may temper their punishment. There have been reports of differences of opinion in the United Nations War Crimes commission regarding the handling of this admittedly ticklish subject, although the Germans can have got small satisfaction from Acting Secretary of State Grew's blunt announcement yesterday that "it is the policy of this government to see that the Axis leaders and their henchmen who have been guilty of war crimes and atrocities shall be brought to the bar of justice."

Naturally there are other points for consideration in connection with surrender. One is that if the Germans should capitulate now, while the enemy is still at the borders of the Reich, they could make out a fair case for history that their defeat actually is only technical, since the Reich hasn't been invaded.

YANK TROOPS ROLLING PAST SAN FERNANDO

M'Arthur's Men On Manila Home-Stretch: Japs Lose 25,000 Men

(By Associated Press)
GENERAL MACARTHUR'S HEADQUARTERS, Luzon, Jan. 30.—Armored Sixth army units, rolling past captured San Fernando along the narrow, swamp-fringed home stretch to Manila, sped unchecked Monday toward Calumpit, only 25 air miles from the Commonwealth capital.

Gen. Douglas MacArthur, announcing seizure of San Fernando in his communique today, said his advance forces were "operating well in advance and to the flanks" of that second city of Luzon and "gateway to Manila."

Yanks in the north made progress toward Baguio, summer capital of the Philippines and likely Japanese staff headquarters. They repulsed two enemy counter-attacks less than 15 miles from Baguio.

MacArthur announced Japanese casualties on Luzon had exceeded 25,000 against American casualties of 4,254, including 1,017 killed.

San Fernando, provincial capital 34 air miles from Manila and 40 by road, fell virtually intact to the liberating Yanks Sunday. The mechanized 37th Cavalry Reconnaissance troop knocked out an enemy roadblock several miles north of the city and entered to be greeted by cheering Filipinos in one of the most colorful celebrations of the Luzon campaign.

Associated Press Correspondent Russell Brines at San Fernando reported "several hundred Japanese heard at daylight along the highway leading toward Baguio after failing in their evidently hurried attempts to destroy the San Fernando river bridge in the center of the city."

From San Fernando the highway forks westward into the Bataan peninsula and southward toward Manila between two swamp areas. Mechanized equipment must stay on the highway or dry ground nearby.

The fight for San Manuel, 15 miles to the southeast, was virtually completed as 25th division Yanks turned back a savage tank-led counter-attack Sunday midnight and annihilated elements of the Japanese Second Armored division.

MacArthur said the sector was "completely cleared" of the enemy after at least five days of bitter fighting. He reported 789 Japanese dead at San Manuel, "with many bodies not yet recovered," and 49 enemy tanks destroyed.

Eleven miles southeast of San Manuel, the Americans drove a wedge into highway No. 8 which leads to Manila along the eastern edge of the central Luzon plain by capturing the town of San Quintin.

Gen. MacArthur broke down the 4,254 American casualties into 1,017 killed, 197 missing and 3,040 wounded.

COLUMBUS, Jan. 30.—John L. Craig, 39, recently of Cleveland, will become Ohio director of the War Manpower commission, E. L. Keenan, Ohio Manpower director who was recently appointed regional WMC director, announced last night.

Craig has been serving as regional WMC chief of placement activities in Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky. He was deputy state WMC director in Michigan in 1944 and prior to that was director of the U. S. Employment Service in Michigan for a year.

Six years ago Craig, as assistant regional representative of the Social Security board, participated in the reorganization of the Ohio State Employment Service when it was part of the Ohio Bureau of Unemployment Compensation.

Next Monday, Keenan replaces Robert C. Goodwin as regional WMC chief with headquarters in Cleveland. Goodwin has been named executive director of the WMC in Washington under Administrator Paul McNutt.

Craig has been serving as regional WMC chief of placement activities in Michigan, Ohio and Kentucky. He was deputy state WMC director in Michigan in 1944 and prior to that was director of the U. S. Employment Service in Michigan for a year.

Merchants Meet To Have Brownout Order Explained

Approximately 70 merchants and business men yesterday afternoon heard an explanation of the "brownout" order, slated to become effective in Salem Thursday, given by Morris Ellsworth of the Canton W.P.B. office in the Ohio Edison Co. auditorium.

Supplementing Ellsworth's explanation of the order, expected to save two million tons of coal annually, was a talk by H. B. Gould of the Youngstown Ohio Edison Co. Gould explained the power concerns position in regard to service curtailment.

The government forbids use of electricity for any outdoor display, advertising or commercial signs. It will darken all store windows, tavern identifications, theatre marquees and any outdoor lighting for commercial night businesses.

It will be strictly enforced by the Youngstown W.P.B. office, under whose jurisdiction Salem users have been placed.

The city's street lights, dim enough as it is, will not be affected by the new ruling.

L. H. Colley, president of the Business Bureau, presided over the meeting.

The "brownout" order says that no electricity shall be used for:

- (1) Outdoor advertising.
- (2) Outdoor display lighting except where necessary for conduct of the business of outdoor establishments.
- (3) Outdoor decorative and outdoor ornamental lighting.
- (4) Show window lighting, except where necessary for interior illumination.
- (5) Marquee lighting in excess of 60 watts for each.
- (6) White way street lighting in excess of the amount set by local authorities to be necessary for public safety.
- (7) Outdoor sign lighting except for direction signs required for fire and police protection, traffic control, transportation terminals or hospitals.

The War department yesterday notified Mr. and Mrs. Frank Helman of Leetonia, former Lisbon residents, that their son, Pvt. Paul Helman, 21, serving with General Patton's Seventh army in France, was killed in action there 10 days ago, Jan. 19.

A member of the 44th Engineers division, he enlisted two years ago, soon after his graduation from Leetonia High school, and had been overseas more than a year. The last word his family received from him was a letter written Christmas day.

Besides his parents, he leaves three brothers, Pvt. Francis Helman in Washington state, Clarence and Richard, at home, and four sisters, Margaret, Elizabeth, Rosella and Anna, at home.

Mrs. Helman is the former Miss Anna Walzer of Leetonia. Pvt. Glenn White, 26, of East Fairfield, was killed in France on Jan. 10, according to word received by relatives.

Pvt. White, who was attached to the 45th division, Seventh army, entered the service in March, 1944, and went overseas last August.

His wife, the former Miss Mae Floor, of New Waterford, and two children have been living with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. White, of East Fairfield. A brother, Alvin White, also lives in that area.

Prior to induction Pvt. White was employed by the Mullins plant in Salem. He was previously reported missing in action.

Pfc. Roger W. Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Taylor of Belmont, has been missing in action in Belgium since Jan. 6.

He entered the service in February, 1943, and had been overseas since August, 1944.

HOPKINS CONFERS WITH POPE PIUS

ROME, Jan. 30.—Harry Hopkins, personal advisor to President Roosevelt, had an audience with Pope Pius today.

Hopkins arrived in Rome yesterday for conferences with military, political and diplomatic leaders in which he intended to gather information for Roosevelt prior to the Big Three meeting with Prime Minister Churchill and Premier Stalin.

He was met by Alexander Kirk, U. S. ambassador to Italy, upon his arrival from Paris and he conferred with the Italian foreign minister, Alcide De Gasperi within a few hours after reaching the city.

OHIOANS AWAIT COAL SUPPLIES

Rail Deliveries Resumed As Bins Are Emptied: War Output Lags

War vital coal was headed toward fuel-hungry Ohio today as munitions production slipped off sharply. Schools, libraries and places of amusement closed in many areas to conserve slim supplies of coal and natural gas.

Lifting of a rail freight embargo last midnight made possible movement of coal, and the Solid Fuels administration diverted the shipments into fast-emptying bins of homes and war plants.

Although coal supplies in Salem are limited, Mayor R. B. Johnson received only three calls today from persons in dire need of fuel for heating.

Toledo and Columbus reported all natural gas deliveries to even highest priority industries were shut off by the Ohio Fuel Gas Co., which also requested domestic consumers to reduce consumption by lowering home temperatures.

The coal situation at Columbus was brighter, however, as the SFA promised earlier delivery of 300 carloads previously scheduled for unloading Feb. 5.

At Cincinnati 52 war plants were without gas, but prospects of easing the coal shortage there were bright as SFA Administrator Wayne Ellis said shipments were enroute.

Seventy-seven carloads of coal were started toward Youngstown, with some of it expected by tomorrow morning.

The state's open hearth steel-making operations were expected to be back to normal by tonight. Republic Steel Corp., the nation's No. 3 producer, said heats were being reheated and operations were resuming at Cleveland, Youngstown and Warren. Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co. hears at Youngstown and was back purchased.

SEBRING, Jan. 30.—A backlog of business to carry well through 1945 was reported at the annual meeting of the Strong Mfg. Co. today. W. U. Pfaff, president and treasurer, and other officers were re-elected. In a move to double capacity, the former French China Co., building has been purchased.

A veritable fountain of historical information is Frank Headland, 37, of R. D. 5, Salem, who boasts one of the most unusual hobbies in the nation.

Interested in anything factual or historic, Headland makes a practice and has done so since 1936—of collecting burial places of famous people the world over.

To date he has compiled, through endless hours of letter-writing, research and newspaper reading, a record of the burial sites of some 10,000 people.

The field of information is unlimited and he stops only after he has secured the information he desires about the person he is interested in.

Although his real hobby is collecting burial information, Headland has many related sidelines and consequently could probably do about as well as anyone on a radio quiz program. Biographical sketches—the kind that pay $75 for the first guess, $60 for the second, etc.—would be easy for him.

Scans Death Columns
Headland scans about 10 or 15 newspapers daily, clipping notices of the deaths of famous, or relatively famous people. At that point his work has just begun.

After he has a clipping telling of the death of a celebrity he proceeds to write to some source near the home or place of death of the person inquiring for complete information, a picture if possible, and other details.

The reply is then catalogued, typewritten and the letter filed away for reference later, if needed.

To accumulate the extensive records he has now, the Deming Co. receiving clerk writes letters from 7 until 9 or 10 p. m. each evening. He averages 15 to 20 letters a night at his home near Millville.

His contacts are made with funeral homes, libraries, newspaper offices, ministers, colleges, government officials, columnists and he has even written to—and received an answer from—the King of England.

Patience and resourceful in his hobby, Headland keeps right on the trail of information that may be hard to get. He has spent as many as six months searching by mail one place and another, for some of his records.

American Division Captures 3 Miles Of Siegfried Line

(By The Associated Press)
PARIS, Jan. 30.—The 18th division captured three miles of the Siegfried line today in a surprise attack through waist deep snowdrifts in the Monschau forest, three miles inside Germany.

The First army outfit struck just north of the eliminated Belgian bulge while other troops of Lt. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges' command and the Third army moved up to the west wall defenses along 40 miles of the Ardennes front.

The Third army expanded its Our river bridgehead nearly a mile into Germany on a two-mile front.

The Germans were pushing troops from Holland, also toward the east, and bombs fell among them.

The First and Third moved within cannon shot of the Siegfried line on a 40 mile front in the Ardennes. To the north, the American Ninth army was through the line for 35 curving miles along the Roer river from Linlich to east of Monschau.

Weather slowed advances more than the shaken Nazi defenses. More snow fell among the seven foot drifts in 11 degree weather. Visibility was low.

South of Strasbourg, American French troops crossed the Colmar canal and further encircled that city of 46,000—largest French city still in German hands except the long by-passed Atlantic ports. Paris newspapers said the Colmar defenses were under attack. At last reports the Allies were half a mile from the city limits.

The First army kept scoring gains with its new system of pre-dawn attacks, catching German rear-guard's off balance in weather when assault seemed impossible.

Artillery Lends Support
Infantry pushed into Honsfeld, 2 1/2 miles south. Another force which Jate yesterday captured Werth and Emserscheid lunged eastward again today and drove to a point less than a mile from the frontier.

The Third army got most of a division across the German border under artillery cover and cleared the Nazi village of Weichenhausen. Weweller and Stubbach on the Belgian side of the Our and about 15 miles south of Et. Vith were cleared. Patton poured more and more troops up to the border; his operation assumed aspects of a large attack.

The Allied line has been brought up to positions from which the present limited scope thrusts might explode at any time into a full force onslaught.

Elements of a whole division were thrown into the fresh invasion, a little more than a dozen miles from the Siegfried pivot of Prum. Nearby Stubbach in Belgium also was taken.

To the north, the Germans were executing a fresh withdrawal from Holland toward the Russian front. Berlin said the Canadian army was heavily shelling their lines east of the Hollandisch dike, which courses 14 miles south of the great Dutch port of Rotterdam.

Berlin said the British Second army was trying to force the Roer river 27 miles southwest of Dusseldorf with major attacks.

The little German village of Weichenhausen is eight miles south of St. Vith and was taken against stubborn resistance.

5 CHILDREN KILLED AS STOVE EXPLODES

TOLEDO, Jan. 30.—Five children of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Johnson perished today when a heating stove exploded as their mother went to a neighbor's home to order coal.

Dead are Henry and Howard, 5-year-old twins; Arnette, 4; Austell, 2; and Irene, 10 months. The mother was injured and taken to a hospital while the others were suffocated while they slept.

The supply contract breakdown showed: $4,370,455,000 for aircraft; $3,988,800,000 for ordnance; $1,425,793,000 for ships and $3,850,912,000 for all others. A total of $1,164,812,000 of the facility projects were industrial and $158,807,000 military.

Contracts by counties included:

CLEVELAND, Jan. 30.—Gasoline "hefts" which may have totaled 100,000 gallons were disclosed with the indictment of six Standard Oil Company of Ohio employees and six Cleveland filling station operators.

The 12 men were indicted yesterday by the Cuyahoga county grand jury on charges of grand larceny and receiving stolen goods in connection with the theft and sale of 30,000 gallons of gasoline between July and October last year.

RED ARMIES RACE TOWARD NAZI CAPITAL

Soviets Press New Attack In Blizzards On 42-Mile Front

(By Associated Press)
LONDON, Jan. 30.—Soviet armored spearhead fighting in a blizzard drove today to within 85 to 90 miles of Berlin in a huge, three-pronged Red army assault toward the Reich capital, Moscow dispatches reported.

A German broadcast declared the Russians had launched a heavy, armored offensive on a 42-mile front inside the border of eastern Germany on a bee-line for Berlin, and that "the first onslaught gained appreciable ground."

The broadcast said the first objective was the communications center of Kustrin on the Oder and Warthe rivers 42 miles from Berlin. A direct Moscow dispatch said Russian columns punched five to eight miles inside Pomerania in a push striking northeast of the German heart city.

Berlin Faces Piners Trap
South of these blows by Marshal Gregory Zhukov's First White Russian army group, tanks and infantry of the First Ukrainian army were striking westward from bridgeheads flung over the Oder river in Silesia.

The Pomeranian and Silesian offensives threatened a pincers from North and south on Berlin. In addition to Zhukov's offensive beating in from the east in Brandenburg, said Associated Press Correspondent Eddy Gilmore in Moscow.

Today's German communique declared Zhukov was attacking heavily in the Obra river sector due east of Berlin, and said the Soviets had made "further gains to the north" around encircled Schneidemuhl.

The bulletin said counter-attacks in lower Silesia had broken through 35 the Russian-surrounded garrison at Zduchov on the Oder's west bank 2 miles northwest of Breslau.

In East Prussia, it added, Germans fighting westward trying to break out from a Russian pocket reached the Elbing bridgehead after a 19-mile gain. German naval forces were thrown into the defense of Königsberg, East Prussian capital, and helped stem Soviet attacks, the Berlin communique said.

Moscow dispatches said the Germans were counter-attacking furiously trying to cover an evacuation from Elbing in East Prussia. Soviet forces sank three German transports yesterday.

Zhukov's northern arm hit deeper after toppling Driesen and Woldeburg, 93 miles northeast of Berlin, and 57 miles from the Baltic port of Stettin. This campaign threatened to cut off northeastern Germany, as well as pull around on Berlin from the north.

Armored columns and mobile infantry hitting toward Berlin from the east, carried the most dangerous menace, Gilmore said. The Russians expect a main German stand at the Oder river in the Frankfurt sector, he added, and are pushing ahead eager for a showdown battle.

Chicago Infant Freezes To Death In Cold Room

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Policeman Timothy Keady said today a 7-week-old boy froze to death in his crib last night as he slept in an unheated bedroom.

The infant, Donny Lawson, was found dead this morning by his mother, Mrs. Nora Lawson, 22. Police said Mrs. Lawson told them she and her husband and their four children had occupied a four-room apartment, heated only by a small stove in the kitchen for a week.

Mrs. Lawson said at 1 a. m. she had added her own coat to Donny's coverings. The other children—Joann, 3; Thomas, Jr., 2; and Helen Marie, 15-months—slept with the parents, she said.

Police took the three surviving youngsters to St. Vincent's orphan age.

Curb Stainless Output

WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—The War production board has forbidden steel mills to fill orders for stainless steel intended for use in civilian manufacturing under the "spot" authorization plan.

Delivery of any steel product by mills to dealers' warehouses for the purpose of building up warehouse supplies was banned also by W.P.B. Authority was continued for the placement of such orders so that mills could reinstate them when the supply situation eases.

TWO MORE COUNTY SERVICEMEN DEAD

Pvt. Paul Helman, Leetonia
Pvt. Glenn White, Fairfield, are Victims

Leetonia and East Fairfield casualties were among the new war casualties today.

The War department yesterday notified Mr. and Mrs. Frank Helman of Leetonia, former Lisbon residents, that their son, Pvt. Paul Helman, 21, serving with General Patton's Seventh army in France, was killed in action there 10 days ago, Jan. 19.

A member of the 44th Engineers division, he enlisted two years ago, soon after his graduation from Leetonia High school, and had been overseas more than a year. The last word his family received from him was a letter written Christmas day.

Besides his parents, he leaves three brothers, Pvt. Francis Helman in Washington state, Clarence and Richard, at home, and four sisters, Margaret, Elizabeth, Rosella and Anna, at home.

Mrs. Helman is the former Miss Anna Walzer of Leetonia.

Pvt. Glenn White, 26, of East Fairfield, was killed in France on Jan. 10, according to word received by relatives.

Pvt. White, who was attached to the 45th division, Seventh army, entered the service in March, 1944, and went overseas last August.

His wife, the former Miss Mae Flier of New Waterford, and two children have been living with his parents, Mr. and Mrs. D. W. White, of East Fairfield. A brother, Alvin White, also lives in that area.

Prior to induction Pvt. White was employed by the Mullins plant in Salem. He was previously reported missing in action.

Pfc. Roger W. Taylor, son of Mr. and Mrs. Clyde Taylor of Belmont, has been missing in action in Belgium since Jan. 6.

He entered the service in February, 1943, and had been overseas since August, 1944.

Salem Man's Hobby Of Collecting Data On Graves Of Famous People Is Most Unusual

A veritable fountain of historical information is Frank Headland, 37, of R. D. 5, Salem, who boasts one of the most unusual hobbies in the nation.

Interested in anything factual or historic, Headland makes a practice—and has done so since 1936—of collecting burial places of famous people the world over.

To date he has compiled, through endless hours of letter-writing, research and newspaper reading, a record of the burial sites of some 10,000 people.

The field of information is unlimited and he stops only after he has secured the information he desires about the person he is interested in.

Although his real hobby is collecting burial information, Headland has many related sidelines and consequently could probably do about as well as anyone on a radio quiz program. Biographical sketches—the kind that pay $75 for the first guess, $60 for the second, etc.—would be easy for him.

Recent Death Columns
Headland scans about 10 or 15 newspapers daily, clipping notices of the deaths of famous, or relatively famous people. At that point his work has just begun.

After he has a clipping telling of the death of a celebrity he proceeds to write to some source near the home or place of death of the person inquiring for complete information, a picture if possible, and other details.

The reply is then catalogued typewritten and the letter filed away for reference later, if needed.

To accumulate the extensive records he has now, the Denning Co. receiving clerk writes letters from 7 until 9 or 10 p. m. each evening. He averages 15 to 20 letters a night at his home near Millville.

His contacts are made with funeral homes, libraries, newspaper offices, ministers, colleges, government officials, columnists and he has even written to—and received an answer from—the King of England.

Patient and resourceful in his hobby, Headland keeps right on the trail of information, that may be hard to get. He has spent as many as six months searching by mail one place and another, for some of his records.

Owns Printed Collection
To exemplify the type and extent of his collection it is interesting to note that he has burial records on all of the presidents, vice-presidents, and a large number of other famous people.

American Division Captures 3 Miles Of Siegfried Line

(By The Associated Press)
PARIS, Jan. 30.—The 78th division captured three miles of the Siegfried line today in a surprise attack through waist deep snowdrifts in the Mouschou forest, three miles inside Germany.

The First army outfit struck just north of the eliminated Belgian bulge while other troops of Lt. Gen. Courtney H. Hodges' command and the Third army moved up to the west wall defenses along 40 miles of the Ardennes front.

The Third army expanded its Our river bridgehead nearly a mile into Germany on a two-mile front.

The Germans were punning troops from Holland, also toward the east, and bombs fell among them.

The First and Third moved within cannon shot of the Siegfried line on a 40 mile front in the Ardennes. To the north, the American Ninth army was through the line for 35 curving miles along the Roer river from Linnich to east of Mouschou.

Weather slowed advances more than the shaken Nazi defenses. More snow fell among the seven foot drifts in 11 degree weather. Visibility was low.

South of Strasbourg, American French troops crossed the Colmar canal and further encircled the city of 46,000—largest French city still in German hands except the long by-passed Atlantic ports. Paris newspapers said the Colmar defenses were under attack. At last reports the Allies were half a mile from the city limits.

The First army kept scoring gains with its new system of pre-dawn attacks, catching German rear-guards off balance in weather when assault seemed impossible.

Artillery Leads Support
Infantry pushed into Honfeld, 2 1/2 miles south. Another force which late yesterday captured Werth and Eimerscheld, lunged eastward again today and drove to a point less than a mile from the frontier.

The Third army got most of a division across the German border under artillery cover and cleared the Nazi village of Weichenhausen, Wevelier and Stuppach on the Belgian side of the Our, and about 10 miles south of St. Vith were cleared. Patton poured more and more troops up to the border; his operation assumed aspects of a large attack.

The Allied line has been brought up to positions from which the present limited scope thrusts might explode at any time into a full force onslaught.

Elements of a whole division were thrown into the fresh invasion, a little more than a dozen miles from the Siegfried pivot of Prum. Nearby Stuppach in Belgium also was taken.

To the north, the Germans were executing a fresh withdrawal from Holland toward the Russian front. Berlin said the Canadian army was heavily shelling their lines east of the Hollandisch dike, which courses 14 miles south of the great Dutch port of Rotterdam.

Berlin said the British Second army was trying to force the Roer river 27 miles southwest of Dusseldorf with major attacks.

The little German village of Weichenhausen is eight miles south of St. Vith and was taken against stubborn resistance.

War With Japanese To Last Long Time, Gen. Stilwell Says

(By Associated Press)
WASHINGTON, Jan. 30.—From the man who should know—Gen. Joseph W. Stilwell—comes a quick sizing-up of the Japanese war.

Says the new Army Ground forces chief who is known as "Vinegar Joe" and as "Uncle Joe":

"The war with Japan will last 'a long time'."

"Japan won't collapse internally before its defeat."

"The bulk of her army may have to be engaged on the Asiatic mainland."

"The Japanese birthrate is so rapid 'we would have to kill 10,000 Japs every week to keep even'."

Stilwell was asked at a news conference yesterday whether the United States might be called upon to furnish the bulk of manpower to fight the Japanese.

He reminded reporters of Generalissimo Chiang Kai-Shek's promise of a counter-offensive and he praised the Chinese soldiers and officers.

"The Chinese soldier," he said, "when properly fed, clothed and trained, turns out to be as good as anyone could ask for. He is better than anyone else in Burma—American, British."

OHIOANS AWAIT COAL SUPPLIES

Rail Deliveries Resumed As Bins Are Emptied; War Output Lags

War vital coal was headed toward fuel-hungry Ohio today as munitions production slipped off sharply. The room, libraries and places of amusement closed in many areas to conserve airm supplies of coal and natural gas.

Lifting of a rail freight embargo last midnight made possible movement of coal, and the Solid Fuels administration diverted the shipments into fast-emptying bins of homes and war plants.

Although coal supplies in Salem are limited, Mayor R. R. Johnson received only three calls today from persons in dire need of fuel for heating.

Toledo and Columbus reported all natural gas deliveries to even highest priority industries were shut off by the Ohio Fuel Gas Co., which also requested domestic consumers to reduce consumption by lowering home temperatures.

The coal situation at Columbus was brighter, however, as the SFA promised earlier delivery of 300 carloads previously scheduled for unloading Feb. 5.

At Cincinnati 52 war plants were without gas, but prospects of easing the coal shortage there were bright as SFA Administrator Wayne Ellis said shipments were enroute.

Seventy-seven carloads of coal were started toward Youngstown, with some of it expected by tomorrow morning.

5 CHILDREN KILLED AS STOVE EXPLODES

TOLEDO, Jan. 30.—Five children of Mr. and Mrs. Howard Johnson perished today when a heating stove exploded as their mother went to a neighbor's home to order coal.

Dead are Henry and Howard, 5-year-old twins; Arnette, 4; Austell, 2; and Irene, 1. The latter died from burns and suffocation while the others were suffocated while they slept.

The state's open hearth steel-making operations were shut off to be back to normal by tonight. Republic Steel Corp., the nation's No. 3 producer, said hearts were being reheated and operations were resuming at Cleveland, Youngstown and Warren. Carnegie-Illinois Steel Co. hearths at Youngstown and Toledo are expected to resume tomorrow morning.

CHARGE INFANT FREEZES TO DEATH IN COLD ROOM

CHICAGO, Jan. 30.—Policeman Timothy Keady said today a 7-week-old boy froze to death in his crib last night as he slept in an unheated bedroom.

The infant, Donny Lawson, was found dead this morning by his mother, Mrs. Nora Lawson, 33. Police said Mrs. Lawson told them she and her husband and their four children had occupied a four-room apartment, heated only by a small stove in the kitchen for a week.

Mrs. Lawson said at 1 a. m. she had added her own coat to Donny's coverings. The other children—Joseph, 3; Thomas, Jr., 2; and Helen Marie, 15-months—slept with the parents, she said.

Police took the three surviving youngsters to St. Vincent's orphanage.

Grand Jury Indicts Six In Cleveland Gas Theft

CLEVELAND, Jan. 30.—Gasoline 'hefts' which may have totaled 100,000 gallons were disclosed with the indictment of six Standard Oil Company of Ohio employees and six Cleveland filling station operators.

The 12 men were indicted yesterday by the Cuyahoga county grand jury on charges of grand larceny and receiving stolen goods in connection with the theft and sale of 30,000 gallons of gasoline between July and October last year.

Detective Leland Hough said last night the total siphoned into illegal 'hannels' would reach 'about 100,000 gallons.'

Limited Powers Of Seizure

Judge Philip L. Sullivan's refusal to accept Atty. Gen. Biddle's claim that the federal government had authority to seize Montgomery Ward properties last December is a triumph for constitutional government. At the same time, it is a defeat for the forces within government which believe it has authority to do anything they want it to do. In this specific case, Judge Sullivan has called their bluff.

He finds that neither under the war labor disputes act nor under the constitutional definition of the powers of the commander-in-chief did President Roosevelt have authority to seize the property of a company whose operations were not clearly involved in war production, or in the immediate prosecution of the war. He does not challenge the war labor disputes act, under which the President nominally moved to seize the properties, but challenges the loose and obviously expedient use of that legislation to justify something which lacks, in his opinion, any justification whatever.

This is a critically important decision. Atty. Gen. Biddle will not let it stand without exhausting all his power of appeal. If it does stand, the power of seizure which was used in this instance to discipline an enterprise which had been critical of government labor policy will be enormously expended. If Montgomery Ward can be seized under presidential war-time authority, either constitutional or statutory, virtually any organization could be seized. In effect, Judge Sullivan has issued a legal reminder to the country and to the officials of the government who hoped to justify their questionable actions in his court that the United States has limited powers of seizure.

He has pointed out what shouldn't need pointing out, that the things they seem to want to do can be done properly only by recourse to congress and should not be attempted by torturing the language of legislation which never was intended to be used as they have tried to use it. And to round out his judicial opinion on points of law, he has added an opinion on point of patriotic procedure to which there can be no dissent and from which no appeal is possible: That if all parties concerned would quit trying to wiggle through legal loopholes and get their heads and hands together for the more efficient prosecution of the war, everybody would be better off.

"The peacetime privilege of engaging in prolonged labor disputes should be voluntarily suspended for the duration," declares Judge Sullivan. Verdict sustained.

Unforeseen Difficulties

The struggle to shake off the ivy paralysis of too much severe winter weather comes under the heading of the unforeseen difficulties which are complicating efficient prosecution of the war. Sometimes it seems as though the unforeseen ones were more numerous than the others.

It is recalled that the winter of 1940-41 was among the most severe in recent European history. Again, in 1941-42, extreme cold and heavy snows added to the distress of German invaders in Russia. The German bombing of Britain was made easier in the summer and fall of 1940 by an unusual succession of cloudless days and nights. The invasion of Sicily almost was turned into a disaster by rough water. Again, when the invasion date had been set for the Allied offensive in western Europe, history hung in the balance while the wind unexpectedly tossed the light craft and wrecked equipment on the beaches. More recently, unusually cloudy weather helped Von Rundstedt to mass forces for the Ardennes offensive, and high water added a major hazard to the Liny-gaven gulf landings on Luzon.

Weather has presented most of its hazards when they were least expected, lacking only a drought in the breadbasket of democracy to complete a picture of unexpectedness.

End Of The Preliminaries

Refusal of the senate commerce committee to recommend Henry Wallace's appointment to succeed Jesse Jones as secretary of commerce and the committee's favorable report on legislation to take certain important lending agencies away from the department mark the end of the preliminaries in this struggle for political power.

Wallace and his backers aren't going to give up, of course. They will exert all possible pressure on senators and representatives to vote against the legislation affecting the lending agencies and to line up behind the former vice president. Specifically, they will use their lobbying influence and bombard congressmen with telegrams and letters, containing the customary threats of reprisals for failure to accede to their wishes.

While they are doing this, if the elements on the other side of the issue take it easy on the assumption that Wallace has been licked and the whole thing is settled—repeating the mistake they made when he seemed to be in the discard after the Democratic convention last summer—there will be a rude awakening. Mr. Wallace and his backers don't give up that easy. There is no reason why they should while they still have at least the apparent support of the White House.

The Stars Say

For Wednesday, January 31.

A PARTICULARLY active and enterprising day is presaged from the current astral intervention, with a concentrating of the forces and faculties on a determined effort to launch major objectives. New propositions are under fire impetus for moving ahead with vigor and definite accomplishment. This may involve change from original plans and programs, with fresh fields of operation or environs, new contracts or agreements, and with much personal gratification for fulfillment of cherished goals by clever, energetic and enthusiastic initiative and ideas.

Those whose birthday it is may count on a successful, productive and prosperous inauguration of ambitious projects, accomplished by personal initiative, enterprise and a constructive and practical manipulation of advantages, even though changes of plans and original programs be involved. There may be travel, new contacts and agreements, but all wisely and persistently concentrated yield surprising and happy climax, with promise of future growth and progress.

A child born on this day should have much initiative, enterprise and practical skills and talents, with clever and shrewd ideas and ambitions.

The Mead Report

By James Thrasher

Our government's financial conduct of this war has been based upon the necessary assumption that (1) the primary object is to beat the enemy, not operate economically, and that (2) what the Army and Navy say they need must be produced as quickly as possible, and hang the cost.

The armed forces have admitted on occasion that they were overstocked with personnel or materiel. And their explanations have been reasonable. For example, a spokesman of the Army Surgeon General said more than a year ago that the Army had more doctors than it needed, and granted that this might work a hardship upon civilians.

"But," he added, "if men die during the invasion of Europe for want of medical care, there is going to be a bigger howl than you're hearing now about the doctor shortage." And, of course, he was right. Invasion casualties fortunately were lower than expected, but it was still essential to make preliminary preparation for a heavy toll.

Perhaps a similar line of reasoning led to conditions which the Senate War Investigating committee reports having found at the Norfolk Navy yard. It may be that the Navy felt it should have an oversupply of workers there, just in case their labor were needed.

But the situation is different. The idle labor which the Senate committee says it found at Norfolk is not something which simply affects the production or supply of civilian goods. That could be borne. But, if true, it should not be condoned when there are shortages in our military production.

The Navy Department's reply to the committee charges was testy, but not clarifying. It cited the number of ships built and repaired at Norfolk in 1944, and concluded that "obviously someone has been doing a job."

But the committee did not suggest that a job wasn't being done. It reported that there were more men at the yard than were needed to do this job, and that many were idle, or working on such things as ornate checkerboards, cyster tables, and model Christmas villages.

It is well that this committee is headed by Senator James M. Mead, for he is a staunch administration supporter whose critical findings cannot be construed as political. In his report to the Senate he not only revealed some unsavory conditions at Norfolk, but suggested that there was similar hoarding and loafing at other Navy installations. And he stated that Navy officials had admitted his charges in committee hearings.

We hope that the Navy's reply to the Mead report will not be confined to blustering and face-saving. The situation is serious and demands frankness from all concerned. It also needs the same sort of thorough airing as was given the scandalous conditions at the Brewster aircraft plant—which, incidentally, was operating under Navy contract.

GUARDING YOUR HEALTH

Sissies and Brutes

BY LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

IN THE discussion yesterday of the objective methods we have for examination of the endocrine system, I said that some of the symptoms most prominently associated in the public's mind with endocrine gland disorders were personality changes, and that for these we have no reliable tests.

Dr. Clendening will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Whether to ascribe them to ductless gland disorders is left to the examining doctor's opinion. Some modification of this statement is permissible and it especially applies to that very familiar phenomenon of lunacy in the female and femaleness in the male.

Sissies and Brutes

Everybody knows them—the sissies and the brutes in short skirts and brogans that are out for the ten mile tramp no matter what the weather. The lady wrestlers and golf champions and the boys who like to paint china. Not that necessarily a lady can't be a golf champion and not remain quite feminine too, but I'm trying to make my point in brief words.

The woman in politics inclines to a somewhat masculine habit of thought. As Senator Vest once asked in a rather emotional form of argument—"How would you like to come home at night and be kissed by a justice of the peace?"—but this was when "Votes for Women" was in its infancy.

Of course all of us have come mixture of both. There is a feminine streak in some tough movie actors which they like to bring out in their most hard-boiled roles. And for all their beauty and delicacy, I darkly suspect that there is quite a lot of he-man in the most charming women.

Measuring Physical Features

There are methods of measuring the physical features if not the spiritual qualities that indicate maleness and femaleness. It would be possible to line up a group of men who represented only very gradually the change from the perfectly characteristic male contour of wide shoulders, narrow hips, non-approximating spans between the legs, and large hands and feet to the last map in line who had narrow shoulders, broad hips, and tapering fingers and toes. And the same thing could be done in reverse with a series of women.

How much the endocrine glands have to do with this is very debatable. The sex incidence of various diseases is largely a complete mystery. Why, for instance, should gout affect men in 98 per cent of cases, women in only 2 per cent? Why should gallstones occur 83 per cent of the time in women, 17 per cent in men? While such conditions as pernicious anemia and diabetes affect men and women exactly equally. Why should whooping cough light on girls more often than boys? These conditions have nothing to do directly with the characteristic male or female organs.

Extracts of Ductless Gland

Nor has there been any real success resulting from the attempts to improve these conditions by giving extracts of the ductless glands or by any other physical methods.

The best wisdom we have to give these "mixed" people is that instead of resenting implications or realizations of maleness in the female and femaleness in the male, they can accept the situation and derive great spiritual strength from the proper balance and application of the factors. The factors are not necessarily antagonistic. The typical he-man and she-female do not represent very agreeable or strong types.

Tenderness in the man and courage and virility in the woman are not disadvantages—quite the contrary to the development of a rounded and perfect personality.

1. A. S. W.—Does the use of bromides over a long period of time ever do any harm?

2. L. G.—What is the remedy you recommend for eruption on the skin caused by prolonged use of promides and headache remedies?

Answer:—Yes, quinine causes a skin rash. Either of the drugs might cause dimness of vision.

R. L.—Will X-ray treatments cure a person of abdominal adhesions from an operation?

Answer: No.

M. E. R.—Can you give any sensible advice on ventilation that will keep our houses from being cold as barns every morning by roomers who regardless of strong winds, open their windows to the top? My roomer insists that a strong gale of wind blowing in his bedroom is necessary to his health.

Answer: If I knew the answer to this one I could certainly use it myself. The world ought to be divided into the cold bedroom and the warm bedroom advocates. But it isn't. I do not believe either make much difference in health, but try and tell them so!

Limited Powers Of Seizure

Judge Philip L. Sullivan's refusal to accept Atty. Gen. Biddle's claim that the federal government had authority to seize Montgomery Ward properties last December is a triumph for constitutional government. At the same time, it is a defeat for the forces within government which believe it has authority to do anything they want it to do. In this specific case, Judge Sullivan has called their bluff.

He finds that neither under the war labor disputes act nor under the constitutional definition of the powers of the commander-in-chief did President Roosevelt have authority to seize the property of a company whose operations were not clearly involved in war production, or in the immediate prosecution of the war. He does not challenge the war labor disputes act, under which the President nominally moved to seize the properties, but challenges the loose and obviously expedient use of that legislation to justify something which lacks, in his opinion, any justification whatever.

This is a critically important decision. Atty. Gen. Biddle will not let it stand without exhausting all his power of appeal. If it does stand, the power of seizure which was used in this instance to discipline an enterprise which had been critical of government labor policy will be enormously expended. If Montgomery Ward can be seized under presidential wartime authority, either constitutional or statutory, virtually any organization could be seized. In effect, Judge Sullivan has issued a legal reminder to the country and to the officials of the government who hoped to justify their questionable actions in his court that the United States has limited powers of seizure.

He has pointed out what shouldn't need pointing out, that the things they seem to want to do can be done properly only by recourse to congress and should not be attempted by torturing the language of legislation which never was intended to be used as they have tried to use it. And to round out his judicial opinion on points of law, he has added an opinion on point of patriotic procedure to which there can be no dissent and from which no appeal is possible: That if all parties concerned would quit trying to wiggle through legal loopholes and get their heads and hands together for the more efficient prosecution of the war, everybody would be better off.

"The peacetime privilege of engaging in prolonged labor disputes should be voluntarily suspended for the duration," declares Judge Sullivan. Verdict sustained.

Unforeseen Difficulties

The struggle to shake off the ivy paralysis of too much severe winter weather comes under the heading of the unforeseen difficulties which are complicating efficient prosecution of the war. Sometimes it seems as though the unforeseen ones were more numerous than the others.

It is recalled that the winter of 1940-41 was among the most severe in recent European history. Again, in 1941-42, extreme cold and heavy snows added to the distress of German invaders in Russia. The German bombing of Britain was made easier in the summer and fall of 1940 by an unusual succession of cloudless days and nights. The invasion of Sicily almost was turned into a disaster by rough water. Again, when the invasion date had been set for the Allied offensive in western Europe, history hung in the balance while the wind unexpectedly tossed the light craft and wrecked equipment on the beaches. More recently, unusually cloudy weather helped Von Rundstedt to mass forces for the Ardennes offensive, and high water added a major hazard to the Lingayen golf landings on Luzon.

Weather has presented most of its hazards when they were least expected, lacking only a drought in the breadbasket of democracy to complete a picture of unexpectedness.

End Of The Preliminaries

Refusal of the senate commerce committee to recommend Henry Wallace's appointment to succeed Jesse Jones as secretary of commerce and the committee's favorable report on legislation to take certain important lending agencies away from the department mark the end of the preliminaries in this struggle for political power.

Wallace and his backers aren't going to give up, of course. They will exert all possible pressure on senators and representatives to vote against the legislation affecting the lending agencies and to line up behind the former vice president. Specifically, they will use their lobbying influence and letters, containing the customary threats of reprisals for failure to accede to their wishes.

While they are doing this, if the elements on the other side of the issue take it easy on the assumption that Wallace has been licked and the whole thing is settled—repeating the mistake they made when he seemed to be in the discard after the Democratic convention last summer—there will be a rude awakening. Mr. Wallace and his backers don't give up that easily. There is no reason why they should while they still have at least the apparent support of the White House.

The Stars Say

For Wednesday, January 31.

A PARTICULARLY active and enterprising day is presaged from the current astral intervention, with a concentrating of the forces and faculties on a determined effort to launch major objectives. New prophecies are under fine impetus for moving ahead with vigor and definite accomplishment. This may involve change from original plans and programs, with fresh fields of operation or environs, new contracts or agreements, and with much personal gratification for fulfillment of cherished goals by clever, energetic and enthusiastic initiative and ideas.

Those whose birthday it is may count on a successful, productive and prosperous inauguration of ambitious projects, accomplished by personal initiative, enterprise and a constructive and practical manipulation of advantages, even though changes of plans and original programs be involved. There may be travel, new contacts and agreements, but all wisely and persistently concentrated yield surprising and happy climax, with promise of future growth and progress.

A child born on this day should have much initiative, enterprise and practical skills and talents, with clever and shrewd ideas and ambitions.

The Mead Report

By James Thrasher

Our government's financial conduct of this war has been based upon the necessary assumption that (1) the primary object is to beat the enemy, not operate economically, and that (2) what the Army and Navy say they need must be produced as quickly as possible, and hang the cost.

The armed forces have admitted on occasion that they were overstocked with personnel or material. And their explanations have been reasonable. For example, a spokesman of the Army Surgeon General said more than a year ago that the Army had more doctors than it needed, and granted that this might work a hardship upon civilians.

"But," he added, "if men die during the invasion of Europe for want of medical care, there is going to be a bigger howl than you're hearing now about the doctor shortage." And, of course, he was right. Invasion casualties fortunately were lower than expected, but it was still essential to make preliminary preparation for a heavy toll.

Perhaps a similar line of reasoning led to conditions which the Senate War Investigating committee reports having found at the Norfolk Navy yard. It may be that the Navy felt it should have an oversupply of workers there, just in case their labor were needed.

But the situation is different. The idle labor which the Senate committee says it found at Norfolk is not something which simply affects the production or supply of civilian goods. That could be borne. But, if true, it should not be condoned when there are shortages in our military production.

The Navy Department's reply to the committee charges was testy, but not clarifying. It cited the number of ships built and repaired at Norfolk in 1944, and concluded that "obviously someone has been doing a job."

But the committee did not suggest that a job wasn't being done. It reported that there were more men at the yard than were needed to do this job, and that many were idle, or working on such things as ornate checkerboards, cyster tables, and model Christmas villages.

It is well that this committee is headed by Senator James M. Mead, for he is a staunch administration supporter whose critical findings cannot be construed as political. In his report to the Senate he not only revealed some unsavory conditions at Norfolk, but suggested that there was similar hoarding and loafing at other Navy installations. And he stated that Navy officials had admitted his charges in committee hearings.

We hope that the Navy's reply to the Mead report will not be confined to blustering and face-saving. The situation is serious and demands frankness from all concerned. It also needs the same sort of thorough airing as was given the scandalous conditions at the Brewster aircraft plant—which, incidentally, was operating under Navy contract.

GUARDING YOUR HEALTH

Sissies and Brutes

BY LOGAN CLENDENING, M. D.

IN THE discussion yesterday of the objective methods we have for examination of the endocrine system, I said that some of the symptoms most prominently associated in the public mind with endocrine gland disorders were personality changes, and that for these we have no reliable tests.

Dr. Clendenning will answer questions of general interest only, and then only through his column.

Whether to ascribe them to ductless gland disorders is left to the examining doctor's opinion. Some modification of this statement is permissible and it especially applies to that very familiar phenomenon of imbalances in the female and femaleness in the male.

Everybody knows them—the sissies and the brutes, in short skirts and brogans that are out for the ten mile tramp no matter what the weather. The lady wrestlers and golf champions and the boys who like to paint china. Not that necessarily a lady can't be a golf champion too, but I'm trying to make my point in brief words.

The woman in politics inclines to a somewhat masculine habit of thought. As Senator Vest once asked in a rather emotional form of argument—"How would you like to come home at night and be kissed by a justice of the peace?"—but this was when "Votes for Women" was in its infancy.

Of course all of us have come mixture of both. There is a feminine streak in some tough movie actors which like to bring out in their most hard-boiled roles. And for all their beauty and delicacy, I darkly suspect that there is quite a lot of he-man in the most charming women.

Measuring Physical Features There are methods of measuring the physical features if not the spiritual qualities that indicate maleness and femaleness. It would be possible to line up a group of men who represented only very gradually the change from the perfectly characteristic male contour of wide shoulders, narrow hips, non-approximating spans between the legs, and large hands and feet to the last man in line who had narrow shoulders, broad hips, and tapering fingers and toes. And the same thing could be done in reverse with a series of women.

How much the endocrine glands have to do with this is very debatable. The sex incidence of various diseases is largely a complete mystery. Why, for instance, should about 98 per cent of cases, women in only 2 per cent? Why should gallstones occur 83 per cent of the time in women, 17 per cent in men? While such conditions as pernicious anemia and diabetes affect man and women exactly equally. Why should whooping cough light on girls more often than boys? These conditions have nothing to do directly with the characteristic male or female organs.

Extracts of Ductless Gland Nor has there been any real success resulting from the attempts to improve these conditions by giving extracts of the ductless glands or by any other physical methods.

The best wisdom we have to give these "mixed" people is that instead of resenting implications or realizations of maleness in the female and femaleness in the male, they can accept the situation and derive great spiritual strength from the proper balance and application of the factors. The factors are not necessarily antagonistic. The typical he-man and she-female do not represent very agreeable or strong types.

Tenderness in the man and courage and virility in the woman are not disadvantages—quite the contrary to the development of a rounded and perfect personality.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

1. A. S. W.—Does the use of bromides over a long period of time ever do any harm?

2. L. G.—What is the remedy you recommend for eruption on the skin caused by prolonged use of promides and headache remedies?

Answer:—Yes, quinine causes a skin rash. Either of the drugs might cause dizziness of vision.

R. L.—Will X-ray treatments cure a person of abdominal adhesions from an operation?

Answer: No.

M. E. R.—Can you give any sensible advice on ventilation that will keep our houses from being cold as barns every morning by roomers who regardless of strong winds, open their windows to the top? My roomer insists that a strong gale of wind blowing in his bedroom is necessary to his health.

Answer: If I knew the answer to this one I could certainly use it myself. The world ought to be divided into the cold bedroom and the warm bedroom advocates. But it isn't. I do not believe either make much difference in health, but try and tell them so!

EDITOR'S NOTE: Dr. Clendenning has seven pamphlets which can be obtained by readers. Each pamphlet sells for 10 cents. For any one pamphlet desired, send 10 cents in coin, and a self-addressed envelope stamped with a three-cent stamp, to Dr. Logan Clendenning, 235 E. 45th st., New York. The pamphlets are: "Three Weeks' Reducing Diet," "Indigestion and Constipation," "Reducing and Gaining Weight," "Infant Feeding," "Instructions for the Treatment of Diabetes," "Feminine Hygiene" and "The Care of the Hair and Skin."

CHAPTER TWELVE

Danielle stood still. She was shocked, but he could not discern how much or in what way. Her last words were peculiar, under the circumstances. "How—how long has been there?"

"I'd say since last night. Why?"

The girl was already recovering from the self-possession—even her normal manner of venomous banter. "Everybody will have to have them. Me—for instance. I was at home alone, a good deal of last night—because Dad was out on a call. How about yours?"

"I didn't say Calder was murdered."

She was silent again. Then she shrugged one shoulder. "Oh, no, you didn't. One simply assumes—guess—that if Jim Calder died—would be because somebody had come in. He was marked for murder. There were times when I could have done it—when I was little—and he went away with Mother. Dad could have. I wonder if he did?"

"Are you talking that way because you think it's funny—or because you're rocky?"

"Because it's the way I talk. Can you say offhand—just what is normal for this little meeting? Are you actually normally—popping out of the woods like a ghoulish and telling me that Jim Calder, whom I've known and hated all my life, is dead on some sort of trap? Telling me as if you were giving the home-assignment for a class in biology? Let me look at him."

"That won't be necessary."

Her eyes still had color, even in the dusk, and it was a greenish color. Her lips smiled. "Maybe not. But two witnesses are better than one. Somebody else may find him like this—and change something, for instance. Besides, I've seen plenty of dead people and I'd like to see what I think myself. I inherit that quality from Dad."

He led her to the deadfall and glanced against a tree while she made a thorough reconnaissance. "Then she had finished, she said, 'I'd better go down to the club and call the police.'"

"Yes."

"Somebody could have built that thing— heaven knows why — it doesn't look as if it would catch on, let alone a bear. He may have fallen into it. Or—somebody may have hit him, and carried him up here, and made that thing, and dropped it on him to cover up the original blow."

"Then there'd be two sets of tracks."

"Sophomore biology homework," he said.

"What?"

"You're talking like the professor. You're a peculiar girl."

"I'm the ruins of what was a good one."

"Let's go to the club. We can discuss your character all summer. I was eavesdropping on you and Bill just now. Interesting—when the female undertakes to become a cad. Interesting—but unconvincing."

They went down the hillside.

Danielle made the call to the police, who she said, she knew. In any event, when she asked for "Wes" she was put through. She told her story tersely. When she had finished she turned to Aggie. "Wes wants us to round up everybody we can here. He'll go up on Garnet Knob with some men—and then join us. I'll start by getting Dad—and pick up anybody I can, on the way."

They left the library. Aggie went down to the desk. Through the doorway, he could see numerous people in the dining room—families who were eating at the club until their kitchens were in working order—and individuals who used the club dining facilities all summer. He beckoned Jack from work. He told him what he had found and what had been done about it and what the police had requested. He kept his voice low. Jack listened with a blank, meaningless look. His face perspired and he wiped the back of his hand across it.

"All right," he said finally. "I'll go into the dining room and make an announcement. I don't know exactly what Wes wants—but if he said he wanted everybody—I'll have everybody." He gazed for a moment at Aggie. "Was the old man killed by accident—or on purpose, do you think?"

"I couldn't say."

Jack's jaw muscles set. "I hope it was on purpose!" he whispered. "I hope he saw it coming—and was frightened. Then he drew a breath. 'I'm sorry. I hated Calder.' He shook himself. 'Have to get into that old, soothing mood for the customers! You had the right hunch this afternoon when you had me send out guys to look for Calder, didn't you?' his expression changed once again. 'Here comes Beth. You take care of her, will you. Her brother and the Draymans haven't come for dinner yet—and it would be rotten for her to find it out by me just stepping forward and announcing it.'"

Aggie said, "Sure."

He turned. Beth had come part way across the foyer. She saw him and smiled. "There you are! All covered with burs and Spanish bayonettes! Been on a nature walk?" Her manner was a mockery of the most fatuous maternal patter—almost baby-talk. She was kidding him.

"Beth," he said, "I want to talk with you. Come on out to the solarium." Already he could hear Jack Browne's voice beginning his "announcement."

Her very dark eyes caught, fully the expression in his. She looked surprised. Her voice dropped half an octave. "Is this going to be serious, professor? I've just heard the darndest thing! Cynthia Symmonds says Sarah is going to promote a match, and who do you think between? You and me! Of course, I don't know a dinosaur bone from a piece of driftwood. But I'm nice in other ways—"

Aggie flushed darkly. This was tough. They were, by that time, on the threshold of the sun porch. He struggled with the self-consciousness she had thrust upon him and the incongruity of such a thing at this time. He kept looking at her. "I've got a shock for you," he said. "And it's not funny—and I hope you won't faint."

"Yes," she said in a still lower voice. "Something's the matter. What, professor?" She was "no longer teasing him."

"Your father's dead. He was killed in a—a homemade trap set for bears—in the woods—apparently last night, after he'd left Sarah's place. By accident." He added that gratuitously.

Beth sat down on a corner of the ping-pong table. "Got a cigarette?"

"Only my pipe."

"Never mind." She sighed unevenly. "Are you sure it was an accident?"

There was the same doubt—this time expressed by the dead man's daughter. "I think so. One can never be sure—offhand."

"I'm glad," she said presently. "Glad?"

She nodded and slung her head in such a way that half her black hair was thrown back over her shoulder. "In a way. You wouldn't want to live with a father like that! To know some of the destructive and some of the sinister things he's done! To be afraid—always—there were others—or that a new and worse one would be done any minute!" She hesitated. "Bill and Martha and Mrs. Drayman were coming right along behind me. I'll go and catch them. They won't want to eat dinner here now."

"The police want—everybody—they said—to be here. They're coming. You tell them—and bring them back."

"Thank you," she said.

Aggie nodded. "You're being pretty sound about this, Beth."

"I am sound," she said. "Perhaps—because Dad was so unsound—and neither Bill nor I ever approved of it."

Foreign-Born Families Having Smaller Families

(By United Press)

NEW YORK — The days when the United States could depend on its foreign-born citizens and their children for its population growth are over, according to statisticians of the Metropolitan Life Insurance Co., who point out that the country's foreign-born now are following the example of native-born Americans in having smaller families.

"In past generations," a report by the company says, "the flood of immigrants with their high rates of reproduction was an important factor in the increase of population, but that era is now apparently past; at present birth rates among foreign-born mothers are about the same as for the native-born."

Only 20 years ago, the statisticians report, the situation was quite different. In 1920, the birth rate among foreign-born women was markedly in excess of that among native-born, not only in the total, but also at every age during the child-bearing period, and for children of all orders of birth. By 1940, the situation had so changed that only for first births was the birth rate among foreign-born a little higher than among the native-born, for second births the rates were practically the same and for births of third or higher order the rates among foreign-born were definitely below those for native-born, indicating the tendency to restrict families actually was becoming more pronounced among foreign-born than among native-born.

At the time of its surrender to the Japanese in 1941, Hong Kong had a normal population of 1,050,256 plus 750,000 refugees from China.

BRUSSELS, Belgium—This beautiful old Belgian capital has become "the Little Paris" of the Western front and British soldiers on two-day leaves seem to have even more fun than American troops on brief holiday junkets to the French capital.

You see them by the hundreds swaggering through the ancient streets of the lower town, buying imitation fudge, crowding to inspect novelty jewelry or cheap watches, or waiting patiently in line to see a show.

Driving into Brussels from the south you wind along double-lane boulevards curving through picturesque forests. You pass through a new residential quarter of the upper town. The homes and modern apartment buildings are as lovely as any in Europe—or America.

To tourists from the battlefield the palaces, museums and fine churches of this upper town fail to hold half the lure of the lower town. The historic structures there—such as the great old Hotel De Ville or city hall and the Prison of St. Gilles, scene of Nurse Edith Cavell's martyrdom in the last World War—hold less interest than the Hinkydink night clubs and restaurants.

Vaudeville never really died: It is just hibernating in Brussels. You can find all the old-time standbys in the cafes here—the bouncing boy juggler who drops one Indian club, the twin blonde dancers with fixed smiles and fixed routines, and the anemic lady crooner with the peroxide forelock and the voice like a worn-out air raid siren.

terbug dancing are having a tremendous vogue. Each cheap cafe or night club has a clattering jazz band. About every 15 minutes, the bandleader swings into the St. Louis Blues, a song which many Labitues of Brussels' cafes believe is the American national anthem. The music is always spirited and the little night clubs are highly popular with the troops. They are usually full of friendly Brussels girls looking for an evening of fun. The more expensive night clubs are remarkably like those strung along 52nd st. in Manhattan and are about equally patronized by Allied military officers and well-to-do Belgians. They pay 90 cents to a dollar and a quarter for a drink and the privilege of dancing on a floor no bigger than a subway car platform.

CHAPTER TWELVE

Danielle stood still. She was shocked, but he could not discern how much or in what way. Her first words were peculiar, under the circumstances. "How—how long has been there?"

"I'd say since last night. Why?"

The girl was already recovering her self-possession—even her normal manner of venomous banter. "Albino. Everybody will have to give them. More—for instance, I was at home alone, a good deal of last night—because Dad was out on a call. How about yours?"

"I didn't say Calder was murdered."

She was silent again. Then she shrugged one shoulder. "Oh, no, you didn't. One simply assumes—I guess—that if Jim Calder died—would be because somebody had done him in. He was marked for murder. There were times when I could have done it—when I was little—and he went away with Mother, and could have. I wonder if he did?"

"Are you talking that way because you think it's funny—or because you're rocky?"

"Because it's the way I talk. Can you say—offhand—just what is normal for this little meeting? Are you actually normally—popping out of the woods like a ghoul and telling me that Jim Calder, whom I've known and hated all my life, is dead in some sort of trap? Telling me that if you were giving the home assignment for a class in biology? Let me look at him."

"That won't be necessary."

"His eyes still had color, even in the dusk, and it was a greenish color. Her lips smiled. "Maybe not. But two witnesses are better than one. Somebody else may find him after this—and change something, for instance. Besides, I've seen plenty of dead people and I'd like to see what I think myself. I inherit that quality from Dad."

He led her to the deadfall and named against a tree while she made a thorough reconnaissance. When she had finished, she said, "We'd better go down to the club and call the police."

"Yes."

"Somebody could have built that thing—heaven knows why—it doesn't look as if it would catch now, let alone a bear. He may have fallen into it. Or—somebody may have hit him, and carried him up here, and made that thing, and dropped it on him to cover up the original blow."

"Then there'd be two sets of tracks."

Danielle glanced at him. "Not if the somebody put on Jim Calder's shoes—and carried the body. You'd have to be awfully good to be able to demonstrate that. The ground's hard."

"Sophomore biology homework," he said.

"What?"

"You're talking like the professor. You're a peculiar girl."

"I'm the ruins of what was a good one."

"Let's go to the club. We can discuss your character all summer. I was eavesdropping on you and Bill just now. Interesting—when the female undertakes to become a cad. Interesting—but unconvincing."

They went down the hillside. Danielle made the call to the police, who, she said, she knew. In any event, when she asked for "We," she was put through. She had her story tersely. When she had finished she turned to Aggie. "We want to round up everybody we can here. He'll go up on Gablet Knob with some men—and then join us. I'll start by getting Dad—and pick up anybody I see on the way."

They left the library. Aggie went across to the desk. Through the doorway, he could see numerous people in the dining room—families who were eating at the club until their kitchens were in working order—and individuals who used the club dining facilities all summer. He beckoned Jack from work. He told him what he had found and what had been done about it and what the police had requested. He kept his voice low. Jack listened

Mansfield-Bellevue Bitterness Dumped In Lap Of OHSAA

Row After Game Referred To State Board As Ohio Sees One Of Wildest Cage Weekends

By HAROLD HARRISON

COLUMBUS, Jan. 30.—Bitterness between Bellevue and Mansfield over a fight which followed their basketball game Friday night was dumped today into the hands of the Ohio High School Athletic association.

Bellevue, charging three of its players were beaten up in the dressing rooms by Mansfield fans, requested the OHSAA to suspend Mansfield from athletic competition.

Harold W. Emswiler, commissioner of the OHSAA, said he had asked Mansfield for his version of the affair and that nothing could be done until all the facts had been assembled.

Bellevue school officials said they were acting to sever athletic relations with Mansfield and had asked Mansfield for all expenses in connection with Friday's game, including damage to team equipment. The fight in the dressing room took place after Bellevue had continued its unbeaten ways by trimming Mansfield, 41 to 34. Rex Hess, sports editor of the Mansfield News-Journal, said Mansfield persons engaged in the altercation had no connection with the Tiger team.

The scrap at Mansfield combined with weird scores, strange records, a wave of setbacks for previously undefeated teams and a possible curtailment of action because of the coal shortage to give Ohio one of its daffiest High school basketball weeks.

South Zanesville rolled up a 102 to 5 score on Otego, holding the losers to one field goal. Only five players scored for South Zanesville and four of them accumulated 100 of their team's 102 points. All but two of South Zanesville's points came on field goals.

Undefeated Canton Timken and Youngstown Woodrow Wilson scored at the rate of 4 1/2 points a minute as Timken recorded an 83 to 60 victory in one of the highest scoring games of the season.

Lancaster St. Mary defeated Newark St. Francis at Newark Friday night and lost to Millersport at Lancaster Saturday night with the result St. Mary now has won all seven of its road games and lost all seven home engagements.

A former class "A" championship coach, who has been in retirement, again moved into the state title picture—in class "B". The coach is Lew Hirt, who directed Hamilton public to the state crown in 1937 and to the semi-finals in 1938. He retired but resumed coaching this year as mentor at Hamilton Catholic. His team has won 11 of 13 and last week was a 31 to 24 victor over strong Dayton Chaminade.

The coal shortage loomed a threat to continued competition during at least the next few weeks. Columbus schools decided to play all of their games this week, and possibly for the remainder of the season, during school hours.

At least five teams, which had been shooting for a perfect season's record, saw their hopes smashed during the past week. They were Marietta, Wilshire, Ridge, North Canton and Cleveland West.

Hitting 41 per cent of their shots, Middletown's Middlesdrubbed Hamilton Public, 47 to 29, for their 12th straight victory this season and their 31st in a row over two campaigns.

Toledo Woodward again had a bad first half—this time against Toledo Libbey—but found the range after intermission and carved out a 39 to 20 decision.

Canton Timken followed up its wild affair with Youngstown Woodrow Wilson with a 63 to 47 triumph over Akron East and now has won 14 in a row.

Canton McKinley whipped Columbus South, 40 to 30, despite South's hitting 20 out of 20 free throws.

Others who stayed in the unbeaten class included Columbus, Yorkville, Euclid Shore, Wayne, Utica and Dola. The week's high individual scorer was found in that South Zanesville-Ostego engagement. Forrest Yarger poured in 19 field goals for 38 points. His teammate, Junior Means, net 28 and so did Potts of Seneca in his team's 67 to 22 conquest of Madison. George Pullen of Canton St. John tallied 27 in an 87 to 43 triumph over Bolivar.

Basketball Scandal Stops Akron-Brooklyn Game Set For Boston's Garden Site

By TED MEIER

BROOKLYN, Jan. 30.—A scandal akin to baseball's Chicago Black Sox affair broke in the collegiate basketball world late last night. Edward Heffernan and Louis Andreozzi, assistant district attorneys of Kings county, announced five players of the Brooklyn college team had signed a statement they had received $1,000 to throw the Akron game scheduled for tomorrow in Boston and that arrangements were under way to fix the St. Francis game scheduled for Feb. 10 at Madison Square Garden.

(In Boston, General Manager Tom Kanaly of the Boston Garden cancelled the Brooklyn-Akron game and said he would try to get another opponent for the Akron team already on its way to the game.)

The prosecutors said the players, whom they identified as Bernard Barnett, Larry Pearlstein, Robert

Leder, Jerry Green and Stanley Simon, made the statement after Barnett and Pearlstein had been taken into custody while in the company of two men booked as Harry Rosen and Harvey Stemmer.

The two men, described as gamblers by the police, were arrested and charged with conspiracy. No charges were made against the players and they were permitted to go home after signing their statement.

This is the story the prosecutors told: Barnett and Pearlstein were observed to enter the Rosen home yesterday afternoon by Police Captain Richard Fennelly and Detectives John Carroll and James Cone who have been assigned to watch the house. They followed the three to Stemmer's house where all four were taken into custody.

At headquarters the two players identified themselves and implicated the other three. The five said they had received an anonymous telephone call several days ago suggesting there was a way to make some easy money. On Jan. 27 they went to Stemmer's home where each received $100. The next day Barnett received another $500 to split among them.

Stemmer, the prosecutors related, declared he had given the players the $1,000 to bet on Akron for him. Rosen was to go to Boston the day

BETTY HICKS, LINKS CHAMPION, NOW GUNNING FOR TOP RANKING IN $TUDY

CLAREMONT, Calif. — Elizabeth Hicks, who has dominated amateur and professional fields in numerous national golf tournaments, has set new goals for herself as a Pomona College student.

"I want to write some day, but first I need an education," explains tiny Betty Hicks of Long Beach, Calif. "I can't be a golf champion all my life."

The present women's professional champion hasn't lost her eye for business, either.

"There's a demand for golf instruction in schools and colleges," she said, registering as a sophomore for the spring term. Proving this, she already has an assistant's job in Pomona's physical education department.

Miss Hicks won the women's national amateur at Noroton, Conn., in 1941, the last time it was played. She acquired the professional crown at Chicago's dizzy Tam O'Shanter last summer.

Miss Hicks comes by her educational aspirations naturally. She has been encouraged by her father, Herman H. Hicks, principal of Long Beach Polytechnic High. A younger sister, Margaret, a Pomona senior, is a scholarship student.

Teaching co-eds to lose precious balls in the sagebrush will help pay Elizabeth's tuition.

SPORT CHATTER

BY HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 30.—They called it the fourth annual dinner of the Connecticut Sports Writers' alliance that was held here last night, but actually it was a state-wide tribute to the drawing power of sports.... You'd be surprised at how many prominent sports figures have a Connecticut background.

NAMES MAKE NEWS

There was Babe Ruth, who told how he once missed an exhibition here, forcing George Weiss to refund a lot of dough.... "I wasn't fined," boasted the Babe, who then unofficially nominated the farm boss for baseball commissioner....

"I've been fined so often I think I owe the Yankee ball club money," Eddie Egan, the old Yale blue who now heads the New York Boxing commission, admitted that reading Frank Merriwell books first gave him the idea of attending Yale.... The Grid Giants' Ken Strong was there, and his old N.Y.U. coach, Chick Meenan, admitting he couldn't do much but sit tight and see what would happen to his projected pro league.

GOOD ADVICE

When Stan Musial reported at the Bainbridge Md., Naval training center last week, the station photographers converged on him. Someone handed Stan a bat while the shutter-snappers gathered a bunch of recruits around him as if they were getting tips on hitting.... One of the kids objected to the way Musial was holding the bat, so Stan handed it over and the "boot" demonstrated the proper method.... As he returned the bat, the kid explained, "You'll never get a hit if you hold a bat that way.".... You can figure for yourself how the youngster felt when someone told him he had been instructing a .347 major league hitter.

CLEANING THE CUFF

Lumberman Bill Cox, ex-owner of the Phillies, has taken over Gene Tunney's interest in the New York All-American Football Conference club.... Bob Guild, sports editor of the Hollywood, Calif., Citizen-News, was an early entrant in the Los Angeles Golden Gloves tourney. Now his pals are asking if he was taking work-or-fight orders seriously or just wanted to make an opportunity for guys who always wanted to poke a sports writer.

SPORTSMEN MEET FRIDAY TO FORM HUNTING CLUB

A meeting has been called for Thursday night at the Memorial building to organize a Salem Hunting club.

A former official of a hunting club in the western part of the state will assist the local group of sportsmen who intend to lease approximately 1,000 acres of farm land and track down foxes which have been causing considerable damage to livestock this winter.

All hunters and sportsmen in the district are invited. A membership of 50 or more is sought. Joe Kelley will preside at the meeting.

The scrap at Mansfield combined with weird scores, strange records, a wave of setbacks for previously undefeated teams and a possible curtailment of action because of the coal shortage to give Ohio one of its daffiest high school basketball weeks.

South Zanesville rolled up a 102 to 5 score on Otsego, holding the losers to one field goal. Only five players scored for South Zanesville and four of them accumulated 100 of their team's 102 points. All but two of South Zanesville's points came on field goals.

Undefeated Canton Timken and Youngstown Woodrow Wilson scored at the rate of 4½ points a minute as Timken received an 83 to 60 victory in one of the highest scoring games of the season.

Lancaster St. Mary defeated Newark St. Francis at Newark Friday night and lost to Millersport at Lancaster Saturday night with the result St. Mary now has won all seven of its road games and lost all seven home engagements.

A former class "A" championship coach, who has been in retirement, again moved into the state title picture—in class "B". The coach is Lew Hirt, who directed Hamilton public to the state crown in 1937 and to the semi-finals in 1938. He retired but resumed coaching this year as mentor at Hamilton Catholic.

His team has won 11 of 13 and last week was a 31 to 24 victor over strong Dayton Chaminade.

The coal shortage loomed a threat to continued competition during at least the next few weeks. Columbus schools decided to play all of their games this week, and possibly for the remainder of the season, during school hours.

At least five teams, which had been shooting for a perfect season's record, saw their hopes smashed during the past week. They were Marietta, Wilshire, Ridge, North Canton and Cleveland West.

Hitting 41 per cent of their shots, Middletown's Middles drubbed Hamilton Public, 47 to 20, for their 12th straight victory this season and their 31st in a row over two campaigns.

Toledo Woodward again had a bad first half—this time against Toledo Libbey—but found the range after intermission and carved out a 39 to 20 decision.

Canton McKinley whipped Columbus South, 49 to 30, despite South's hitting 20 out of 20 free throws.

Others who stayed in the unbeaten class included Columbus, Yorkville, Euclid Shore, Wayne, Utica and Delta.

The week's high individual scorer was found in that South Zanesville-Otsego engagement. Forrest Yarger poured in 19 field goals for 38 points. His teammate, Junior Means, set 28 and so did Potts of Enceneville in his team's 67 to 22 conquest of Madison. George Fulton of Canton St. John tallied 27 in an 87 to 43 triumph over Bolivar.

FOURTH STREETERS WIN OVER ST. PAUL

Fourth Street school reversed the process yesterday and handed St. Paul's a 17-8 defeat to eliminate them from first round, Mickey McGuire league title chances at the Memorial building.

In two previous encounters the St. Paul's outfit defeated Fourth Street. A playoff, scheduled at 6:30 p. m. Thursday, will be held between Fourth Street and Columbia Street for the first round title.

All three teams were tied for first place when the round was closed.

Basketball Scandal Stops Akron-Brooklyn Game Set For Boston's Garden Site

By TED MEIER
BROOKLYN, Jan. 30.—A scandal akin to baseball's Chicago Black Sox affair broke in the collegiate basketball world late last night. Edward Hefferman and Louis Andreozzi, assistant district attorneys of Kings county, announced five players of the Brooklyn college team had signed a statement they had received $1,000 to throw the Akron game scheduled for tomorrow in Boston and that arrangements were under way to fix the St. Francis game scheduled for Feb. 10 at Madison Square Garden.

In Boston, General Manager Tom Kanaly of the Boston Garden cancelled the Brooklyn-Akron game and said he would try to get another opponent for the Akron team already on its way to the game.

The prosecutors said the players, whom they identified as Bernard Barnett, Larry Pearlstein, Robert Leder, Jerry Green and Stanley Simon, made the statement after Barnett and Pearlstein had been taken to custody while in the company of two men booked as Harry Rosen and Harvey Stimmer.

The two men, described as vandals by the police, were arrested and charged with conspiracy. No charges were made against the players and they were permitted to go home after signing their statement.

This is the story the prosecutors told: Barnett and Pearlstein were observed to enter the Rosen home yesterday afternoon by Police Captain Richard Pennelly and Detectives John Carroll and James Cone who have been assigned to watch the house. They followed the three to Stimmer's house where all four were taken into custody.

At headquarters the two players identified themselves and implicated the other three. The five said they had received an anonymous telephone call several days ago suggesting there was a way to make some easy money. On Jan. 22 they went to Stimmer's home where each received $100. The next day Barnett received another $500 to split among them.

Stimmer, the prosecutors related, declared he had given the players the $1,000 to bet on Akron for him. Rosen was to go to Boston the day before the game and after getting the betting odds, was to tell the boys, shortly before game time, what to do. The players were to receive an additional $2,000 after the game.

Barnett and Pearlstein, the prosecutors said, had gone to the Rosen home yesterday to make sure of the extra $2,000.

For their part in the St. Francis game, Leder, Barnett and Green each was to receive $600 and Pearlstein $350. It had not been decided how much Simon was to get. The Brooklyn team previously this year beat Western Michigan, Western Kentucky and Texas Christian at the Garden.

Sportsmen Meet Friday To Form Hunting Club
A meeting has been called for Thursday night at the Memorial building to organize a Salem Hunting club.

A former official of a hunting club in the western part of the state will assist the local group of sportsmen who intend to lease approximately 1,000 acres of farm land and track down foxes which have been causing considerable damage to livestock this winter.

All hunters and sportsmen in the district are invited. A membership of 50 or more is sought. Joe Kelley will preside at the meeting.

BETTY HICKS, LINKS CHAMPION. NOW GUNNING FOR TOP RANKING IN $TUDY
CLAREMONT, Calif.—Elizabeth Hicks, who has dominated amateur and professional fields in numerous national golf tournaments, has set new goals for herself as a Pomona College student.

"I want to write some day, but first I need an education," explains tiny Betty Hicks of Long Beach, Calif. "I can't be a golf champion all my life."

The present women's professional champion hasn't lost her eye for business, either.

"There's a demand for golf instruction in schools and colleges," she said, registering as a sophomore for the spring term. Proving this, she already has an assistant's job in Pomona's physical education department.

Miss Hicks won the women's national amateur at Norem, Conn. in 1941, the last time it was played. She acquired the professional crown at Chicago's dizzy Tam O'Shanter last summer.

Miss Hicks comes by her educational aspirations naturally. She has been encouraged by her father, Herman H. Hicks, principal of Long Beach Polytechnic High. A younger sister, Margaret, a Pomona senior, is a scholarship student.

Teaching co-eds to lose precious balls in the saccharine will help pay Elizabeth's tuition.

Co-ed Betty Hicks.

SPORT CHATTER

BY HUGH FULLERTON, JR.

NEW HAVEN, Conn., Jan. 30.—They called it the fourth annual dinner of the Connecticut Sports Writers' alliance that was held here last night, but actually it was a state-wide tribute to the drawing power of sports. You'd be surprised at how many prominent sports figures have a Connecticut background.

NAMES MAKE NEWS

There was Babe Ruth, who told how he once missed an exhibition here, forcing George Weiss to refund a lot of dough. "I wasn't fined," boasted the Babe, who then unofficially nominated the farm boss for baseball commissioner.

"I've been fined so often I think I owe the Yankee ball club money," Eddie Egan, the old Yale blue who now heads the New York Boxing commission, admitted that reading Frank Merriwell books first gave him the idea of attending Yale. The Grid Giants' Ken Strong was there, and his old N.Y.U. coach, Chick Mehan, admitting he couldn't do much but sit tight and see what would happen to his projected pro league.

GOOD ADVICE

When Stan Musial reported at the Bainbridge Md., Naval training center last week, the station photographers converged on him. Someone handed Stan a bat while the shutter-snappers gathered a bunch of recruits around him as if they were getting tips on hitting. One of the kids objected to the way Musial was holding the bat, so Stan handed it over and the "boot" demonstrated the proper method. As he returned the bat, the kid explained, "You'll never get a hit if you hold a bat that way." You can figure for yourself how the youngster felt when someone told him he had been instructing a .347 major league hitter.

CLEANING THE CUFF

Lumberman Bill Cox, ex-owner of the Phillies, has taken over Gene Tunney's interest in the New York All-American Football Conference club. Bob Guild, sports editor of the Hollywood, Calif., Citizen-News, was an early entrant in the Los Angeles Golden Gloves tourney. Now his pals are asking if he was taking work-or-fight orders seriously or just wanted to make an opportunity for guys who always wanted to poke a sports writer.

NAVY HITS ENEMY NEAR WALCHEREN

(By Associated Press)
SUPREMACY HEADQUARTERS, Allied Expeditionary Force, Paris, Jan. 30.—An Allied naval force is now engaged "in active though small scale operations against the enemy" among Dutch islands north of Walcheren, Adm. Sir Harold M. Burroughs said today.

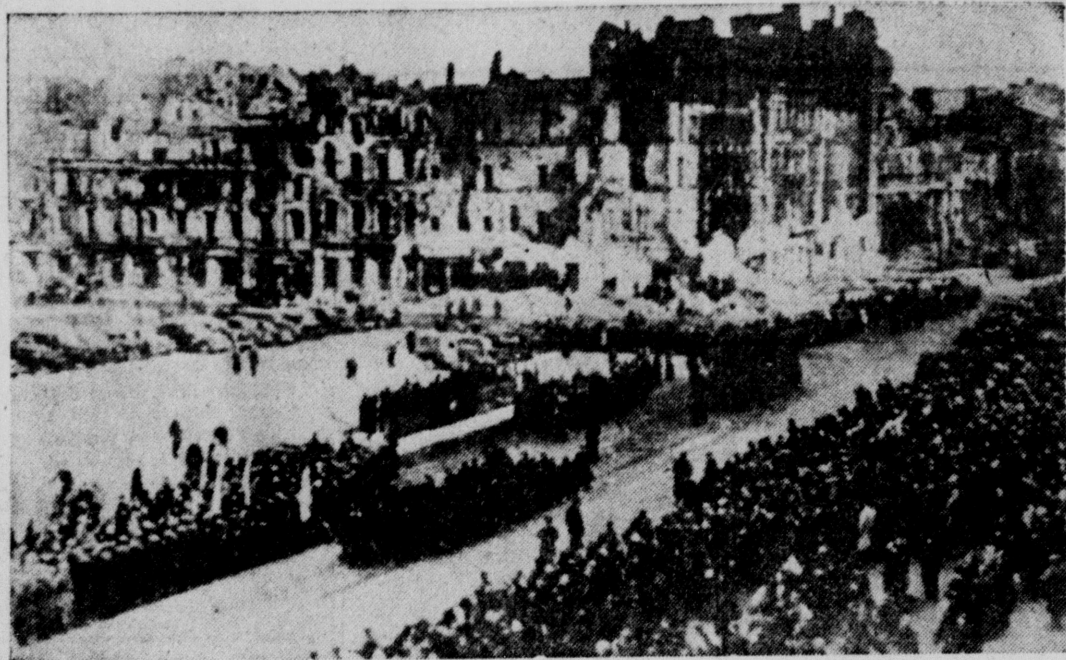

The new Allied naval commander in chief added significantly to future operational possibilities.

"The coasts of Germany and the remainder of western Europe still occupied by the enemy offer opportunities for the use of sea power, such as the assault on Walcheren, which turned the key to the port of Antwerp."

Current operations in the North sea are commanded by Capt. A. F. Pugsley, who directed the assault upon Walcheren, which guarded the northern entrance to the Scheldt estuary leading to Antwerp.

Numerous islands have been carved in southwest Holland by the rivers Rhine and Meuse (Meuse) as they meet the sea. Most important of these still in enemy hands are Schouwen, Noord Beveland, Goeree, Trolen, Oorne Putten and Tien Gemeeten. Frequent German troop concentrations have been noted and noted on Schouwen.

Stalin Can Call The Tune On Foreign Policy At 'Big Three' Strategy Meeting

By TOM WOLF

LONDON.—There is evidence here to indicate that military and not political considerations will be number one on the agenda when the Big Three next meet.

The situation today is similar to that at Teheran, where the primary question was synchronization of Russia's summer offensive in the east with D-day landings in the west.

Today the biggest item confronting Stalin, Churchill and Roosevelt is the meshing of Russian and Anglo-American strategies so that the German general staff will be unable to shuttle divisions across Germany from one front to another every time it wants to make an attack like the recent Von Rundstedt offensive.

This does not mean that a discussion of political problems will be ruled out—any more than they were ruled out at Teheran. It's now an open secret that at Teheran Churchill and Stalin—with Roosevelt's silence being interpreted as consent—worked out a general division of Europe into spheres of interest, as are now clearly visible in such countries as Poland and Greece.

VICTORY IS VITAL

But if Teheran is any guide, it does mean that Stalin and the Russians are likely to do most of the time-calling. This is true for two reasons:

From the Churchill-Roosevelt point of view the only really vital thing in this stage of the war is winning it. They are willing to make concessions to Russia or anyone else who can help hasten victory. So, for that matter, is Stalin. Few observers familiar with Russia at first hand believe that Stalin would under any circumstances rest before reaching Berlin and revenge. But they believe that past propaganda to the effect that he might—propaganda which has, incidentally, far more value to Moscow than to Berlin—has had sufficient effect, especially on Churchill, so that Anglo-Americans would not risk calling this propaganda bluff.

Second, and more importantly, Britain and the United States have not worked out—to date, at least—any common specific foreign policy to put as a bargaining point against Russian demands. Take the Polish case as an example. Reliable Polish informants have told me that the Poles got the impression that the United States was not willing at Teheran to commit itself in support of the Curzon line and Curzon line A (giving Lwow to Russia). Both Churchill and Stalin favored this line.

Later, however, when Mikolajczyk went to Moscow with Churchill, Molotov informed him flatly that all three powers at Teheran had agreed to the Curzon line and Curzon line A. Ambassador Harriman, who was present as observer at the Mikolajczyk meeting, remained silent. It was only considerably later Mikolajczyk was informed that the United States hoped frontier questions could be postponed until the end of the war, but that if they had to be settled now, we would support Poland's claim to Lwow.

For Poland, indeed for the rest of Europe, Anglo-American policy hasn't gone beyond agreement on the principle of free and general elections at the earliest possible stage. Meanwhile, Anglo-Americans are agreed that the most urgent problems everywhere are security for military operations and feeding of the population.

Historical and ethnological claims aside, the Russians would maintain that their attitude in Poland is based on the simple need for protecting their security in the absence of a joint Anglo-American program guaranteeing the same. This explains such unilateral action as Russia has taken in Poland, including the recent recognition of the Lublin committee. This recognition, incidentally, came as a distinct surprise here, since Foreign office thinking generally indicated that such recognition, if it came at all, would not precede the Big Three meeting.

In general, British viewpoint on Poland can be summed up as follows: Britain disagrees with the Polish government's all-out anti-Russian policy. But, at the same time, the Polish government here does control Polish forces fighting with the British. And there is little doubt that there are many among those forces who are anti-Lublin.

When he saw Mikolajczyk Stalin is said to have suggested that the Polish prime minister form a new government and move to Lublin, take in some members of the Lublin committee, and establish a unified government. Mikolajczyk is known to have been in favor of going to Lublin. It was partly on this score and partly on the question of the Curzon line that he resigned.

In general, with the possible exception of Russia's recognition of the Lublin committee, the Big Three have kept each other pretty well informed in advance of their moves. But that's about all. The ticklish Polish problem will not be solved amicably until Britain and America form clear joint Polish policies.

Balance of Power
 Lack of joint Anglo-American policy goes back in turn to America's lack of a specific clearcut foreign policy. Senator Vandenberg's speech hit the nail on the head. Seen through European eyes, America's past role in international responsibility is insufficient for Europeans to bank on us unless we go much further in our foreign policy than generalities like the "Atlantic Charter."

In the final analysis, post-war Europe might be presented with the bitterly ironic possibility: Russia's sphere of influence would extend to Germany's eastern borders; Britain's sphere of influence would extend to Germany's western borders. And who would be left in the all-important position of holding the balance of power in Europe? Germany!

wholesale. This would be a triumph for the fatherland, though tough on the Nazi leaders who would have to face the War Crimes commission. Then you hear a lot of people speculating whether the Hitlerites might hold the Russians on the Eastern front and deliberately let the Western Allies invade the Reich, figuring that Germany's punishment will be more severe if Red troops are first in the country. On the other hand there are some observers who think it's not beyond Hitler to try to drive a bargain with Moscow at this eleventh hour.

Either of those things could happen. Giving the Western Allies a free run to Berlin certainly wouldn't make the Nazi position worse, and while Hitler would wish his soul to escape from his present dilemma, he won't find any buyers in Moscow.

It's easy to see that it is a big decision for the Nazi leaders to make. They apparently feel their best gamble is to keep on fighting and watch for some loop-hole for escaping the full punishment for their crimes. Anyway, that's the basis on which the Allies have proceeded—a finish fight.
